SPRING SCHOOL

Current Migration & Refugee Dynamics
This spring school on current migration and refugee dynamics addresses one of the most urgent societal, political and academic topics at this moment. It specifically strives at bringing together the often disconnected views and theoretical concepts in the fields of migrants’ and refugee's trajectories and pathways along their journeys, from their country of departure to their country of arrival, through transit countries and the multiple borders they have to cross. It examines the causes, characteristics and implications of current movements, the varying experiences of migrants and the political regulations and social situations that affect them.

The course offers participants:

- Thorough knowledge on the current practical, political and theoretical challenges of current migration and refugee dynamics.
- Engagement with disciplinary approaches from sociology, geography international relations, humanitarian aid studies and development studies.
- Field visit to a refugee-support organisation
- Teaching methodology promoting academic debate and writing, including a writing workshop and peer review sessions.
